My experience as an Erasmus student in Düsseldorf has been nothing short of transformative. From the moment I arrived, I was captivated by the city's charm. Düsseldorf is a clean and beautiful city, where you can see greenery everywhere, making it a pleasant place to live and study. The well-maintained parks and tree-lined streets provide a serene environment that is conducive to both learning and relaxation.

The academic aspect of my stay was particularly enriching. Studying in Düsseldorf was an enlightening experience, as I learned a lot of new things, especially when we delved into subjects in more detail. The quality of education is exceptionally high. The university itself made a lasting impression on me with its vast and modern campus. It is a huge institution, and I remember feeling overwhelmed at first, almost getting lost in its extensive grounds. However, this initial sense of being lost soon turned into a feeling of excitement and discovery as I familiarized myself with the various departments and facilities.

The structure of the courses is thoughtfully designed, divided into two parts: lectures and tutorials or exercises. This approach ensures that students not only gain theoretical knowledge but also have ample opportunities to apply what they have learned in a practical context. The lectures were deep and thorough, with professors who were both knowledgeable and passionate about their subjects. They explained complex concepts in detail, making sure that every student could follow along. What struck me the most was how welcoming and approachable the teachers were. They were always willing to provide additional explanations and support, making it easy to ask questions and seek clarification.

One of the highlights of my academic journey was the interactive nature of the tutorials and exercises. These sessions were not just about reinforcing what we had learned in lectures; they were opportunities to engage with the material on a deeper level, to discuss and debate ideas, and to collaborate with fellow students. This hands-on approach to learning helped solidify my understanding of the subjects and allowed me to develop critical thinking and problem-solving skills.

Overall, my time in Düsseldorf has been an incredible learning experience. The city's beauty and the university's high standards of education have left a lasting impression on me. I have grown both academically and personally, thanks to the supportive and dynamic environment. This experience has not only broadened my knowledge but also enriched my life in countless ways.
